The paper examines the link between memories of asylum life and recollections of personal identity in former institutionalized Finnish adult women, who were born in different decades. The questionnaire, administered in 2004-05, was answered by 109 women. Memories of the asylum life were analyzed with reference to social controls (known self-image and social network) and mental health (separation anxiety and loneliness) of the women. Self-images and the social network of the women were associated with the memories. They were also related to the mental health of the women. Memories of asylum life were related to both the images and the network of the women. Considering that the women had identical social environment at the time of examination and that they did not have the same mental health, it is remarkable that the connections between the memories and
