TrayCD is an easy-to-use program with a very good user interface. This software is best suited for Windows XP and higher. TrayCD allows you to create a new icon on the system tray. You can launch the interface using a keyboard shortcut (one can be assigned to the shortcut manually). The most important feature of TrayCD is how you can assign a "system tray" icon to a specific program. Once a user chooses a program to associate with an icon, it will automatically appear in the tray every time that program is launched, and will "poke" up if that application is closed. You can create your own "actions" for this program (right-click on the icon and select "Properties" to open the Properties dialog box). That is, you can also have a tray icon of an application appear whenever a specific browser like Firefox, Internet Explorer or Google Chrome is launched. And this works from both old versions of Windows and from Windows 7. TrayCD Features: - supports all Windows versions from 2000 to Windows 10 - supports user-defined tray icons - displays a user-defined message whenever the associated program is launched or closed - allows you to set specific actions when the associated program is launched or closed - an icon appears in the system tray when the associated program is launched - supports icons that launch a URL from the system tray - supports icon moving from the old position to the new one when a user changes the icon position - supports customized icons - allows you to create custom icons in the tray area - allows you to configure the mouse pointer image - supports user-defined mouse behaviors - allows you to associate existing applications with the tray area - allows the user to switch between icon and text view - supports tray icons with Windows XP SP2 or higher - supports icons and strings that toggle between an open and a closed form - supports tray icons and blank spaces in the tray area - supports tray icons with text - supports tray icons with images - supports tray icons with a single click - supports tray icons with actions - supports tray icons with a dual click - supports tray icons with a system tray delay - supports tray icons that open a URL when the application is opened - supports tray icons that play a sound when the associated program is closed - supports tray icons that play a custom sound when the associated program is closed - supports tray icons that play a custom message aa67ecbc25

System Requirements:

4GB RAM or above 600MHz or higher processor 1024x768 display resolution and above Windows Vista or higher DirectX 10 To begin, we wanted to get the game running and then take a few screenshots. While we didn't have too much time to play with the game, we were able to make our own character and go through a dungeon before we talked to the developers. The dungeon we went through had an easy start in the form of a Save Point. This meant we could start at a certain point and continue
