Q: Java Method to check if an integer is a multiple of another integer I'm trying to make a method which will check if an int is a multiple of another int. The method would return true if the target is a multiple of the "divisor", and false if it's not. Here's an example of what I'm trying to achieve: int divisor = 10; int target = 20; boolean isMultiplicative = divisorModulo(target, divisor); public boolean divisorModulo(int target, int divisor) { for (int i = 1; i false divisorModulo(3, 7) -> true divisorModulo(3, 8) -> false divisorModulo(3, 6) -> true A: Here's a simple implementation: boolean isDivisible(int target, int divisor) { return target % divisor == 0; } EDIT Given the updated question, the solution is simple: boolean isDivisible(int target, int divisor) { return target / divisor == target; } A: I like Goaf's solution. But for completeness sake, you can also write your own: public boolean isDivisible(int target, int divisor) { if (target % divisor == 0) return true; for (int i = 1; i

In a somewhat surprising reversal, the LPS trial judge initially imposed a partial sentence of eighteen months' imprisonment and eight years' community custody, but later amended the sentence to eliminate the community custody requirement. The State requested that full probation with a condition of community custody be imposed, arguing that "prison time is not going to help [Appellant] in the long term."[3] Despite the State's position, however, the trial court determined that "[t]his case is one that, in this court's estimation, cannot be accepted probation."[4] The trial court further indicated that it "would be effectuating the same type of sentence that resulted in [Appellant] being placed in [community custody] for the prior cases that led up to this current offense." Although the trial court's stated reason for imposing full probation in this instance was that full probation was necessary to avoid a possible violation of the terms of Appellant's community custody, the implication was that Appellant would be in violation of the terms of his community custody if the trial court imposed a lesser sentence. The State's request that full probation be imposed therefore served to constrain the trial court's sentencing options. See, e.g., Lockwood, 282 N.W.2d at 205 ("[T]he State, in seeking to avoid a minor sentence by having the defendant placed on probation, is doing more than giving the defendant the benefit of a concession; it is imposing a condition upon the defendant's sentence."). 3 While the State requested full probation, it did not expressly request that the trial court impose a probation period. 4 The State also argued that Appellant's prior record, as well as the fact that he "previously violated his probation and had a previous conviction for the same offense," supported a prison sentence.
