Find and buy essays on Tomo desarrollo del pensamiento tomo 27Â .An immunohistochemical study of the effects of androgen on the structure of the seminiferous tubules in rats treated with glucocorticoids. The alterations occurring in the testicular microstructure after the administration of glucocorticoid hormones and the effects of androgen on these alterations were investigated in Sprague-Dawley rats (12 weeks of age). Fifteen days after both the subcutaneous injection of 1 mg/kg cortisone acetate (CA) twice a day and the administration of 300 micrograms methyltestosterone acetate (MAS), the histological observations of the testicular tissue obtained by the administration of 3-4% glutaraldehyde (GA) revealed degeneration of spermatogonia, fall in the height of the germinal epithelium, and the disappearance of some spermatocytes. Administration of MAS and/or CA in longer periods seemed to cause complete or partial recovery of the injured seminiferous epithelium, but administration of 50 mg/kg of perphenazine acetate (PZ) and/or 0.4 mg/kg of cyproterone acetate (CPA) caused degeneration of the germinal epithelium. To determine the effect of androgen on the structure of the seminiferous tubules, rats received injections of MAS, CA, and PZ, in combination with CPA, until sexual maturity (12 weeks of age). Histological observations of the testicular tissues observed by the administration of 3-4% GA revealed no degeneration of spermatogonia in the testicular seminiferous tubules. These results indicate that the seminiferous epithelium was affected by the administration of glucocorticoids or androgen.
