Fixed a bug that made it difficult to use the program. Fixed a bug that in some cases could cause bugs . At first start up the program creates a unique code, which is then written in the CURRENTCACHE file. This is how program works. The program can use two different files, where data files are stored. Both files are identical in structure and can be written to disk. The CURRENTCACHE file is designed to store data about which files to open. It should contain lists of open file names. The CURRENTCACHE file specifies in the list field the name of the file from which the file is opened, and in the list fields the number of items in the list of files of that type. The CURRENTCACHE file must not contain any data. The OPENLIST and PKGSRC files are used to process the file lists and contain information about the currently opened files. The OPENLIST and PKGSRC files contain lists of file names. These lists are stored in the PKGSRC file. To view the file list, open the archive with the OPENLIST or OPENLIST files. To access the OPENLIST file list, click OPENLIST and choose one of the following If an OPENLIST file exists in the folder you are using for file sharing, open that folder and select OPENLIST from the file list. If the OPENLIST file does not exist in the folder you are using for the file exchange, click the OPENLIST button in the dialog box and select the OPENLIST file from the file list.
