He wants the government to give him a say in the selection of rajan's replacement, who will have to be picked by the present coalition, the BJP and the Congress. Just back from the US, where he has been making a movie in San Francisco, Mukesh Ambani told The Indian Express from Dubai that if the issue of the Prime Minister's post-retirement residence arises during the ongoing Budget session of Parliament, then he will request the government to allow him to be a member of a think tank "that suggests the idea" of the residence. Ambani, the chairman of the world's largest private sector business group, also said he was in touch with the Gujarat government for "civil work". He did not elaborate. "As I have not met the current PM, I cannot be specific. It is only speculations. But I think the political circles should be aware of the possibility and I too will make a representation," he said. "But my heart is a businessman, so I believe India must take calculated risks," he said. Ambani said if the government allows him to be associated with a think tank, this will give India "reasonable credibility to say that it wants the best in the selection of who should be the country's next Prime Minister". It is a common mistake to view reform from the perspective of national interest rather than the interest of people. India's policy making system is not geared towards serving people's concerns. The third pillar of our system, people, is often bypassed. But that doesn't mean that the system should be left untouched. I will touch on a couple of specific reforms that would make the system work better for the people. The creation of the post of Lokpal was an important step for our country. It was a reform not just in the political class, but also for the judiciary. The implementation of Lokpal was also a process that was rigged up by the bureaucrats and a lot of money was spent unnecessarily. The Lokpal Act 2013 which was an extension of the office of Lokpal, created a new office of Lokayukta, which will be an effective pan India institution
